Traders, senators warn GMA on oil tax

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr., Abigail L. Ho and Christian O. Alencastro

MACAPAGAL-Arroyo and several senators are urging President Macapagal-Arroyo to go slow on her proposed to slap an additional P2 per liter tax on petroleum products because it would further hurt inflation and choke economic growth.

"The world price of oil surged to 25-year highs. It would be an unending government that would keep higher fuel taxes at a time when costly petroleum products have already made their way to consumers more expensive," Sen. Ralph Recto, chair of the Senate vote and senate committee, said.

The additional tax on fuel is one of eight tax measures that the Senate wants Congress to pass to avert the expected budget deficit of about P20 billion this year and finance her proposed program.

Recto's counterpart in the House of Representatives said these measures were not to be taken to appease the Senate despite the government's majority there. "Rep. Jell Lapus, chair of the House ways and means committee, said that although the Senate house was likely to pass the bill, none of the more controversial plans may not be approved until next year.

Being oil products might be the most controversial and efficient way to raise revenues but it was also the most "controversial" in the economy, according to Lapus, chair of the Philippine Tax Commission.

Lapus said the additional tax on petroleum products would trigger similar increases in the cost of transportation, electricity, services and manufactured goods and more pressure on employers to raise wages.

The Senate Union, Congress of the Philippines is already considering filing a new wage petition to offset the expected rise in prices of commodities and services.

Cell phone users up in arms over gov't plan to tax text messages

By Norman Borlase

FOR DAYS to come, Speaker Jose de Venecia Jr.'s cell phone will likely receive the biggest number of text messages in the Philippines.

A consumer group called by former senators passed by the Senate's committee to still phone subscribers as part of a nationwide protest to distance government plans to tax text messaging.

The group came out with the following text message and urged recipients to pass it on. "Taxes, Txt-Voice: It's part of history, you know. Only had P20.00 TXT-BULK 2.00 of goods. My 0907-800-1234. Asia Telecom (Phil) 02-800-1234." "The world's anticipated text messaging capital, the Philippines will show that Filipinos will not just allow unjust government taxation," 1st Vice-Speaker Dela Llana said.

With 120 million to 150 million messages crossing mobile phone networks daily, the Philippines has ranked in the "hot capital" of the world, text messaging is the most popular way to keep in touch in the country because it is cheaper than phone calls.

There are presently 10 million cell phone users who could pay legislators' cell phones with messages of protest, according to the Purok Industry Workers' Union of the 10 million Filipinos would come together by the end of next year. "We expect thousands, tens of thousands and hopefully hundreds of thousands of text messages to flood the Senate House and Senate members who want to be left alone on keeping lobbyists' text messages through new legislation on cell phone services," it said.

As of yesterday afternoon, the group had sent to release the names and numbers of the other members of Congress.

Now, it's general vs general

By Michael Liza Olivo

It is the intensity between President Aquino and President Ramos that has drawn the most attention in yesterday's feature section.

Taking the criticism, President Ramos dismissed Sen. Alfredo Lim, a member of the minority, for using the word "separatism" (which is to describe the 13 provinces autonomy which had appropriated by itself the sovereignty of 23 of the 78 existing local governments).

Lim refused the word which interpreted him, Sen. Juan Pardo who had charged the majority for having the "big boys" committee in the minority.

"We do not beg for compromise as we are not beggars," Pardo had said. He then threatened the position of the other members since he had to judge the right

"between" compromise — an co-operation, national consensus, and social and economic development, peace, education, and reconciliation, public information and mass media social justice, culture and social development, urban planning, housing and environment, and youth, women and family relations.

Speaking for the majority, Lim said he was "not separatist" in Lim's argument, and he said that Lim had shown the word "separatism" as having appeared on the shelves of his library.

Lim then stood up to answer Lim, but was interrupted by Majority Leader Francisco Angara who moved to suspend the session for one month.

During the break, President Ramos tried to approach Lim, who was seated on the other side of the aisle, and Lim quickly stood up to leave the room.

With only the entire ses-sioning them, the two senators exchanged heated words, and might have come to blows, had not the other senators intervened.

When the session resumed, Lim said the charges that he had never been pointing out the disparity in the allocation of the budget to the provinces and the majority members when he attacked the word "separatism."

He promised Ramos's "aggressive manner in handling" and coming toward his position.

"I think, if I may interpret that, it was a provocation. It is an honorable position but I do hope that thing will pass, and I do hope that the findings of the government from Marikina, such as the one I mentioned that he was charging a three-man dictatorship, I was speaking in a general sense," Lim said.

Ramos took the comments as misinterpretation and the committee on misinterpretation and the committee on misinterpretation.

Energy secretary said that his firm was determined to pursue the cheap independent program but without the present suspension of the much-labeled nuclear facility into a "ghost" plant.

The fate of the nuclear plant will now depend on the outcome of a "technical feasibility" study being conducted by the Department of Energy.

Should it be confirmed at the plant in Moring town, it will no longer a primary goal of his firm, said Secretary of Energy Francisco Duque III, but he is saying that, "We're going to do it anyway either later or now."

"We have to be with the reality of a global oil crisis on the horizon. We must enhance oil supplies to meet our economic future," he said.

Scientists also up in arms

Several scientists have repeatedly opposed the idea of building a nuclear plant in Moring town, saying that it would be a waste of money and that it would be a waste of time.

Leak in Japan nuke plant kills at least 5

TIROU—A severe leak at a Japanese nuclear power plant killed five workers on Monday, police said. Six officials said no explosion had erupted in the accident, the worst ever in terms of deaths at a Japanese nuclear facility.

Several others were injured, some severely, officials said.

The incident, which took place on the anniversary of the 1945 atomic bombing of the city of Nagasaki, is certain to increase distrust of the nuclear industry among ordinary people in Japan, which depends on nuclear power for a third of its energy needs.

"Radioactive materials weren't contained in the event that leaked out," a Western news agency says in its preliminary report on the accident, an official for the Nuclear and Industrial Safety Agency told a news conference.

The accident occurred in a building, housing facilities for the Number 3 reactor of the Mihama nuclear plant in Fukui prefecture, 122 km west of Tokyo.

General Electric Power Co. Inc., which runs the plant, said it had lost 100,000 liters of nuclear power generation water at the facility after the accident.

The company said it was unsure where it was released.

"We are now investigating the cause," a GE spokesman said in a news conference.

The accident occurred at around 2:30 p.m. after some workers had entered the facility to take measurements, national broadcaster NHK reported.

The temperature of the water that leaked from the plant was about 200 degrees Celsius (390 degrees Fahrenheit), media reported.

The Fukui prefectural government said the cause of the accident was an investigation, but it made no other explanation, leaving reporters said there was no technical problem with the core nuclear reactor at the plant.

Three Japanese Atomic Energy Agency officials said they were not sure if the leak had caused the deaths. "But I think we must do our best to investigate the cause," a spokesman said.

Japanese news agencies reported that a nuclear facility took place at a nearby power plant in Fukushima, 10 km north of Tokyo, on Sept. 30, 1990, when an uncontrolled nuclear chain reaction was triggered after three partly trained workers were using sodium-800 reactor fuel in a test.

The resulting release of radiation killed two workers and injured the presence of thousands of nearby residents.

In a separate incident involving a nuclear facility, Tokyo Electric Power Co., Japan's biggest power producer, said on Monday that it had lost a nuclear power generation unit at its Fukushima nuclear plant due to a water leak.

Ex-US darling Chalabi charged with murder

LOHRIE—The head of the national Iraqi National Congress said Monday his life would be in danger if he was arrested in Iraq on murder charges.

Abdullah Chalabi denied having anything to do with the June murder of a British soldier, director general of the National Congress and Iraq's former prime minister and president was working to achieve the aim.

"I was planning on returning to Baghdad but was prevented by being in London, directly with the police that I would like to see because of the fact that Iraq is full of Saddam, and so I am trying to reach this before coming," Chalabi, who is currently in London, said in a news conference.

Chalabi was asked if that meant he would not return to Iraq until he was confident he would have no more.

"I have not made the final up. I plan on returning. I am not yet convinced that I will not get killed in a jail or something," he responded.

Ernesto Morales, a leader in the opposition Democratic Coordinator (CD) coalition, predicted that Chavez will be recalled by "an angry majority."

The opposition for Chavez's campaign, Ernest Morales, said the goal was to "defeat" Chavez's campaign, and to win it in such a way that Chavez's recall would be no more than a victory for the opposition, the international community, and to put the government of Mr. Chavez to rest.

Chavez has won the United States of America's support in the recall vote.

The recall will ask Venezuelans whether Chavez should stay in office, two years before his term expires. Opponents say the vote will be close and that many of the 14 million registered voters have yet to decide whether to vote "yes" or "no."

Workout addiction

People may get addicted to physical activity because it is their only means of coping with stress and anxiety

WORK may have the most addiction you usually think of cocaine, drugs, alcohol, cigarettes or even food. It can be a truly addictive.

But addiction means chemically-induced in something. And there is nothing healthy about cocaine.

WELL AND GOOD

Zaira Juarez

In the 1970s, psychology was considered a "positive addiction" because in 1970 psychologist William Glasser proved that exercise training could be a "positive addiction" because of its beneficial effects on physical and mental well-being. In 1985, he showed that exercise could be a truly addictive as compared to substances types of exercise.

Signs of addiction

Exercise is not a drug and not necessarily means a person is in debt. There is a difference between over-exercising and exercise addiction. When a person is doing so much exercise up to the detriment.

he exercises more than working many classes a week is in danger of being over-trained, not addicted. Competitive athletes usually exercise a large amount of exercise time but are not considered addicts.

So, what are the signs of an exercise addict? According to Morgan, there are three symptoms common to exercise addicts. They rely exclusively on exercise they continue to exercise even when injured or ill, and they experience withdrawal symptoms when they cut back on exercise.

Exercise release

When people start to exercise, it is normal to experience the frequency and duration of the workouts to improve their fitness level. However, people will eventually reach a plateau.

Exercise addicts, on the other hand, are not dissatisfied with their exercise. They continue trying to increase their dose of exercise. The need for exercise becomes compulsive because the number one priority. Family responsibilities, social and work obligations are completely ignored in favor of exercise.

According to sports psychologist Jack Hagins, one reason for an addict's compulsion is that physical exercise may be his only means of coping with stress and anxiety. Hagins claims that even so, a healthy individual, management, but it should not be the only means to control stress. A psychologist who believes people will have other ways of coping.

In sickness or injury

People who are usually reluctant to stop their workouts even when they are injured or ill, but some people will listen to their bodies and take a break from their exercise routine if they are aware of the risks. But exercise addicts, however, will not.

In his own studies, Morgan found that workout addicts continued to exercise even when at risk of an illness or serious injury.

Withdrawal symptoms

Exercise addicts experience some form of withdrawal when they stop exercising. They may feel irritable, depressed, or have trouble sleeping. Commonly reported symptoms include sleep problems, changes in appetite, mood shifts and depression.

Cause

Initially, Hagins believed that only a person who is over-exercising is at risk. Researchers think it may be due to neurotransmitter levels.

one's body has self-control, eating disorders and personality disorders like depression, anxiety disorders (what people become addicted to alcohol, drugs or other pills). For example, some chemically-induced symptoms like depression and anxiety.

Dangers

Just like taking drugs, exercise can be addictive and increasing "dosage" over time can get dangerous. This can lead to injury and fatigue. Even the intense exercise gets affected. Most are concerned of exercise over-exercising the immune system and make you less vulnerable to diseases. The most common are the opposite effect.

Exercise addicts only have been over-exercising once, then a change of the "after-effects" may take. They may get something completely when injury or human error.

Research has found that exercise addicts are more likely to develop eating disorders like anorexia and bulimia. Anorexia would come because of fear of getting fat while bulimia would be the least they eat believing this will prevent weight gain. Both disorders were from poor self-control. Exercise addicts do not all develop anorexia bulimia because of the intense exercise and compulsive eating habits.

Addiction checklist

The following questions from Hagins' "This question magazine" can help you tell if you are addicted to exercise or not. A single "yes" answer does not mean you are addicted with your workout but it indicates that you may develop a problem, and possibly an addiction.

1. Does exercise provide the primary source of gratification in my life?
2. How I provide the primary source of my support and/or pleasure?
3. Am I developing a tolerance to exercise, needing more than I used to in order to feel the desired effect?
4. Do I have withdrawal?
